

Fashions and Fads

Hats are nearly all dark. Skirts are long, narrow and high-waisted. The hipless girl is in the height of style. The vest is an important feature this winter. Bodices are absolutely flat and close-fitting. Hairpins with the open-arched tops are most stylish. Children's white fur hats sound a wide range of style. Lines are for the most part long and flat and straight. The slipper is colored to match or contrast with the gown. White fur of every sort and kind will be much worn the coming winter. Pajamas seem to be the favorite wear for school girls, both large and small. Women's calling cards have changed slightly in shape and are now almost square.

The fashion of bloomers for the small girl is an increasingly popular one. The lace coat figures as a part of many of the dressy frocks of this season. An entire crown representing a great rose is one of the novelties encountered among hats. Braided cheviot and serge have retained their popularity for separate coats and suits. White coats for the street are long and hang in almost straight lines from the shoulders. Black satin, messaline or satin-faced crepe is exceedingly stylish in colored dresses. Sleeves reach to the wrist and mold the arm with a somewhat unflattering faithfulness. For visiting cards, Old English, Roman block and old-fashioned script are all fashionable. For shopping, street or general service, the skirt is usually plain and in clearing length. The opera bags seen this year are very elaborate affairs on which many gold spangles are employed. Tiny wreaths of flowers made of ribbon achieve the daintiest kind of decoration for girls' frocks. In fur coats one finds a survival of the kimono sleeve, fitted into the arm and made into a coat sleeve. Winter cloaks are very much longer and the backs are even straighter and flatter than they were three months ago. Fish nets continue to be much used for blouses and many beautiful models are made over a chiffon cloth or mousseline lining. Sleeves must spring straight from the armhole without any little kimono manche or merciful epaulette to break the severe effect. Sets of jeweled hatpins are one of the gifts now bestowed upon the fashionable bride. The set generally consists of five pins. A shift waist of French flannel, having a small polka dot on a white ground is attractive with a necktie and belt of the color of the polka dot. A very exclusive haberdasher in Paris is introducing men's handkerchiefs with monograms three inches long and a half inch in width. Large revers and the standing collar are emphatic features of the season's styles in coats. The raglan holds its own among long coats, as one that is not only extremely useful, but as also possessing a certain distinctive style. Tunics of Greek inspiration, draped now from the shoulders and again from the hips, are to be seen both on evening and on afternoon gowns. A heavy stocking in silk or lisle thread, with a shot effect in two colors, is introduced for those who wear low shoes all the year round. Many of the season's coats have shawls coming from beneath the vest or from the edges of the Consulate collar, either one adding a stylish touch. The deep, narrow yoke is an insistent feature of this season's modes and is in perfect harmony with the tendency toward tail, slender effects. In this day of slashed skirts and petticoated ankles, both slippers and stockings have assumed a place of luxury and importance undreamed of in other times.

Muffs and neckpieces of marabout are very popular just at present, and particularly is this the case with the kind called the clustered marabout. Fur is used not only for collars and cuffs, but around the bottom of coats of various lengths, especially the very long and the three-quarter length coats. Brother and sister are the titles given respectively to the sylph bocker and the princess slip-two garments of Italian silk warranted to give the new figure. Not only are skirts sheath fitting, but all petticoats are made in exactly the same way. Otherwise it would be impossible to attain the desired result in gowns. Bronze and olive green, myrtle, smoke gray, elephant, prune, Russian blue, cadet, navy and the rich dark blues are all made handsome by trimmings of black satin or velvet. With the directoire coats the sleeves are long, and come very low down over the hand as well, while they are likewise buttoned down the seam and adorned with a row of braid loops. The princess and directoire skirts extending above the normal waist line retain their hold upon popular favor, and the bodice should be in harmony with the skirt of this character. The Cossack turban sits flat on the head and covers the forehead as well as most of the back hair. Although it is not at all becoming, this barbarous looking turban has taken Paris by storm. The separate collar is a happy idea for the woman who likes to give a good gown good, hard wear. With the collar she has a luncheon gown; without it a dress for the restaurant or theatre. A marked feature of the new skirts is the shifted position of the closing. They almost invariably fasten on the left side of the back, though the bodices continue to close in the center. Afternoon gowns that are suitable for receptions, teas and other affairs of more or less informal nature are made of broad cloth, chiffon velvet and silk cashmere, and are in sweep length. To part the hair in the middle is just now the fancy of the Parisienne. The waves being brought well down over the face, while the hair is turned abruptly back at the sides over two cunningly inserted side pads.

While no skirt at the present time can be called full, those designed of soft, thin materials are often made to fall in voluminous folds, but they have the top closely laid in tucks that produce the sheath fit. The shortened waist and straight, clinging lines of the skirt are features that strongly influence the winter modes, characterizing sybilian gowns, dressy coats and suits for afternoon and other affairs of ceremony. This is a day when bags, little or big, ostentatiously plain or elaborately decorated, are put to a hundred uses, from the shopping and automobile bags down to the delicate little wrist and vanity bags. Each one of the puffs arranged at the back of the Psyche knot is held in place by a large hair pin, and the pompadour is now held by a pin instead of a comb. Some girls, too, have gone so far as to add one to each side of the knot. In gowns having the high waist line the top of the skirt is often tucked, but if the gown is of chiffon or anything of this nature the gathered top permits the soft fall of the material to cling to the figure and follow the outline becomingly.
